For a description of the project see also American Libraries 30 (June/July 1999): 95.

"The Local Legacies project celebrates, and shares with the nation, the grassroots creativity of every part of America," said Librarian of Congress James H. Billington. "Through photographs, sound and video recordings, and written records documenting historic and cultural events and traditions that are part of everyday life, Local Legacies will provide a 'snapshot of America' at the turn of the century and a valuable resource for future generations."
